The Daily Quote

"It wasn't a sit-in, but House Democrats on Thursday resumed their floor protest to demand votes on bills to combat gun violence. Republican leaders, meanwhile, struggled to find enough GOP support for legislation they have promoted as a response to last month's mass shooting in Orlando. Starting slightly before 1 p.m., Democrats lined up by the dozens on the floor for about 90 minutes, requesting to bring up a bill to expand background checks... Democrats are pushing Republicans to hold votes on measures that would prevent suspected terrorists from obtaining firearms and expand mandatory background checks for gun sales... Republican leaders are having trouble finding enough votes for their own gun and counterterrorism measure due to opposition from the House Freedom Caucus, a group of roughly 40 conservative lawmakers."
